and of course retired with honors many and grateful. The plans of the Red Cross in Italy, with headquarters at Rome, are to take up health and sanitation of the Y to perfect a national committee and erect buildings throughout Italy's large cities, where they do not already exist, and greatly to enlarge the work in Rome itself; and of the Knights to create an Italian committee on lines similar to the Y, to provide work in Rome on lines followed in other cities, and extend that work rapidly as possible throughout the principal Italian cities. Knights say they are influenced by the pope to make an exception of Italy, their first aim being to go to foreign countries little if at all until work was well established in the United States. All three organizations named were successful in Italy more pronounced than in almost any other country, owing to unusual war conditions.

Push Collections.

Bishop, district superintendent, Methodism of the north have just held a meeting and determined that their century, observing 100 years of missionary effort, has been in largest measure a spiritual movement, not at all adversely affected in that direction by the successful campaign for a large sum of money. Their three lines of emphasis, intercession, stewardship and life service, outweigh in results the money end, so these leaders say. Now they announce a new program which calls for 1,000,000 new Methodists by June 1, 1925. Every Methodist minister has been instructed to start forthwith a campaign on spiritual lines, with membership in the church as the goal.

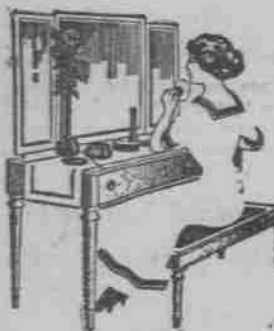

This century celebration, planned by these bishops and other Methodist officials, pledges itself to see to it that subscriptions covering five years do not lag, and are really paid. It announces plans for literature and education, a stewardship period for each year, when money matters are attended to and gotten out of the way, and a campaign of evangelism, especially of children, that is to be as thorough as possible, with the century now concluding. Methodists are also pledged by this new conservation, to get the most possible out of the present situation and its availing.

Elizabeth Wonders If Her Feeling For John Butler Is Not More Than Friendship.

CHAPTER XXXI.

AMOS CHAPIN'S words lingered in Elizabeth's mind that night after she had gone to her room.

"I don't think there's the least need of your brother's coming on to look the farm over this fall," he had said.

Douglas Wade's sister knew that Chapin did not want the owner of the property on the scene just yet. It would not be to his interest to have Douglas see how well the place was looking. That bit of information, however, he would obtain from John Butler. Amos must know this, yet he based some of his hope of acquiring the property on Douglas Wade's deferring his visit east to a later date.

Elizabeth understood his scheme, complicated as it might seem at the first glance. Amos had asked his son to arrange for a loan of enough money to enable him to buy the farm. He would wait to hear definitely from Clifford before making an offer to Douglas. If he could make this offer while the young physician was in actual need of money, there was every chance of its acceptance.

Since Wade was paying John Butler no salary, it was plain that he could not afford to pay one. Since Butler was willing to give his services without remuneration, it was evident that he knew that his friend, the owner of the farm, could not afford to pay him, and he was, therefore, willing to help him over a hard place.

Elizabeth appreciated that all signs pointed to her brother's need of funds. She shivered a little at this conclusion. She knew—nobody else so well as she—just how hard up Douglas was. She knew that this was the hardest summer of his or her existence. The farm was a dead weight upon him. He might feel it was his duty to part with it. Yet, how he would hate to do so—how she would hate to see the dear old place pass into other hands. This was the home that had belonged to her grandfather and to her father—the home to which her parents had come as bride and groom, and to which, later, they had brought their children each summer so that the

Beauty Chats By Edna Kent Forbes

What You Can Eat.

I HAVE spent so much time telling women what they cannot eat when they reduce, that I shall devote today to mentioning a few things that they can eat. And I want to add, in answer to "Farmer's Daughter," that the women who live on farms are specially fortunate, because they can get green vegetables and fruits from their own gardens, without paying the increasingly large prices that the town women must for such things.

You can eat—Chicken, lean beef, lean steak, lean fish, oysters, clams, apples, lemons, consommé, skim milk, buttermilk, tea with lemon, black coffee, oranges, watermelon, eggs, lettuce, asparagus, beets, string beans, turnips, gluten bread, cabbage, carrots, cauliflower, celery, corn, tomatoes, cucumbers, onions, parsnips, radishes, spinach, squash, uncooked cereals.

This is not a complete list, nor have I attempted to classify the various items. I am simply putting in these things to show you that eliminating fats and starches does not cut the heart right out of your diet. You can eat most fruits, whether listed or not, except bananas and grapes and figs—eat them right out if you are constipated. In fact, you can reduce and eat fat too, but in that case you must cut down the quantity. That's why a study of calories is important—it's the arithmetic by which you can figure out the amount of food you eat.

Questions and Answers.

M. H.—If you can have the hair on the face removed by the electric needle process, you will find that the most satisfactory way. If you cannot, pull out the most prominent hairs with tweezers and touch the spots with peroxide. This is antiseptic and a bleach too.

Peggy—There is a preparation containing maleic acid which is said to act directly upon the mammary glands and so to develop the bust. I have the formula for it, which I will send you if you wish on receipt of a stamped, addressed envelope. It is quite harmless to use.

Anxious—Gray blue and blue of almost any shade would be becoming to a girl with eyes like yours. But if you are pale, flesh pink or rose shades would add a touch of color to the cheeks, or at least, give an effect of color.

Broken Hearted W. H.—You need to use a cleansing cream every day, which as soon as you have done your work, wash with hot water, apply the cream, work it well into the skin, wash off with soap and water, and with an ice rub or a cold rinse.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Q. WILL president and Mrs. Wilson be allowed to keep the presents they received while in Europe?—F. S.

A. All presents given president and Mrs. Wilson as personal gifts they will be allowed to keep. Those given the president by a government intended for the United States government, of which the president was only a representative, are to remain in the white house.

Q. How can I clean an old copper kettle?—J. F. S.

A. First rub with a lemon dipped in powdered bathbrick. When the stains are removed, wash in warm, soapy water and then polish with the powdered bathbrick and a soft cloth.

Q. What are the duties of the secret service of the United States?—L. N. G.

A. "Secret service" in its narrow sense is the name applied to that bureau in the treasury department the duties of which as defined by law are to detect counterfeiting and to protect the president. The term "secret service" in its broader sense includes all of those agencies which detect violations of federal laws and which keep the government informed as to international relationships. Military intelligence is the chief secret service in the broader sense and it coordinates and uses all the lesser detective agencies of the government.

Q. What is meant by the budget system? Is it used in other countries?—W. C.

A. The budget as used by the British government contains the periodical financial statements which are laid before the parliament. It embraces reports of receipts and expenditures for a prior fiscal period. These primary estimates form the basis of legislation in England, the character of expenditure submitted to parliament an annual statement of expenditures deemed necessary by the government. It is responsible for the entire expenditure and must harmonize the estimates of the several ministers. In the United States the budget is practically prepared in the house of representatives. The secretary of the treasury upon the opening
